For more than twenty years, Stuart Roberts has helped employers solve problems arising in the workplace, both as a litigator and counselor. Stuart's primary experience is defending lawsuits and arbitration claims brought by employees under federal and state discrimination laws wage and hour laws, whistleblower statutes and many other laws that govern the employment relationship.

Stuart strives to understand the business of each client, the products they make, the services they provide and the internal culture they try to maintain. This background allows him to counsel clients based on their unique characteristics, needs and strategies. For example, Stuart guides employers through employee discipline and termination issues with an eye on consistency of outcomes and the goal of avoiding litigation. Stuart also crafts employment policies/handbooks and employment agreements for C-suite executives and other key employees that are customized to the needs of the organization. He also helps employers navigate through reductions in force and drafts severance agreements for those affected. Stuart also assists employers when visited or audited by OSHA, the Department of Labor, the OFCCP and other government enforcement agencies.
